Janiero and that she would be joining him shortly in Israel.

- During his interview with Ambassador Castro-which was almost simultaneous with Timerman's boarding aircraft--General Viola stressed that the expulsion decision had created bitter divisions within the military and had "caused deep wounds which would take a long time to heal." Viola showed strain and anxiety from the tense discussions preceding the junta decision and complained that the timing of the court's decision could hardly have been worse. He implied that the hardliners had resisted the decision bitterly and that it would have a political impact in many other areas. said thatkk they had bxpected a possible adverse decision either well before the IAERC visit or a month after, but that the decision during the visit together with the revival of the Campora asylum issue had seriously overloaded the military's circuits. volunteered that the Campora decision would be even more difficult and he did not know how that would turn out.
- GOA certainly complied with its promise to provide Timerman best protection. His manner of travel to the airport is usually reserved for visiting chiefs of state. The Supreme Court published its decision in the Timerman case on September 25. Decision will be subject of serger report. Details of other subjects discussed by septels.
